I am a student, academic or researcher

- Keep abreast with the latest global developments in your field whether political, social, legal, humanitarian or economic.
- Keep up with the trends in the world economy, development and climate change.
- Base your research on the wealth and reliability of the official data provided by the United Nations' 195 Member States.
- Access a unique and comprehensive collection of international law, treaties and human rights documents.
- Track the official information and statistics on our roadmap towards achieving the Sustainable Development Goals by 2030.
- Study the original source of many international standards and regulations.
- Allow students to read and share specific texts on newsworthy topics such as humanitarian and refugee issues, gender, youth, disability, accessibility, disarmament, sustainability, environmental protection, peacekeeping, forests, nuclear energy, urbanism, drugs, human trafficking etc.
- Provide an essential resource for trustworthy information on geo-political and geo-economic issues, disarmament and peacekeeping.
- Use up to date development, demographic and industrial statistics to support research.
- Compare data across the full set of human development indicators for the past 25 years.
